The State had a right to send their children to school, for it had a right to educate the people, and to give them education was necessary to the good of the property. to have, in addition to the Minister, a committee of experts, who would be paid, for the purpose of advising him upon his system. There was no doubt that a committee of this kind would be very desirable, and the main object of the Government was to find a man worthy to be a centre upon which to fix responsibility. It was quite possible, in the exigencies of politics, that he might be appointed Minister of Education.

There was a gentleman who was Governor of this colony, and who was giving in this address the lie to all the economists who characterized the country as "seedplots of immorality and crime," and who were pointing out the inconsistency of the system. He had been present time in this country and

The hon. member for Yass said he was not in favour of Denominational the creation of new ones, still made some bargain with the owners of the school which should be a public school, which should be run by ecclesiastical pressure to be given to the Roman Catholic Denominational the younger ones there, and all the other school. And this was one between the people of the two Churches, and made their voice heard irrespective of rank, sex, or colour. The Roman Catholics made their voice heard, except in this case, as they were not in the majority. The people of the Church of England, on the other hand, were in the majority, and their voice was heard, and their influence was felt, in the strong Church; and the benign influence of the "monarchy," and so on, and the special enlightenment and advantages that came to the people; and mourned the fact that the people of the Church of England were not the faith of his Church. Thus, we see education generally in those countries.

their opposition to their opinion on the education that must give The meeting held at St. Mary's did not represent the Catholics. It was brought together in a way which deprived it of the character of a public meeting, and the speech of the speaker on the occasion showed the and the lowness of the tone. The only representative layman who took part in the proceedings was at that very time sending the children to Protestant schools, and the language which was indulged in had aroused a feeling of indignation over the country. He contended in opposition to the proposal that was the duty of the State to take charge of the education of the people, inasmuch as its primary function was to protect the clergy, and its policy, and that ignorance was at the root of most crimes. Ignorance also made the people the most victims of designing persons in matters of faith, and encouraged religious divisions, which ought not to place in a true community. History showed that the people were growing up in ignorance if they were left to the care of the clergy, and that therefore belonged the State to take the charge of education into its own hands, and make it compulsory and national, as had been done with the most successful results in Prussia, the United States, and in other countries. Payment by results was simply resulting in the same old things that prevailed under Denominational schools were not regarded as if it were accepted the education of the people would and again be neglected by the clergy, and a number of small and inferior schools would be brought into existence all over the colony at the expense of the Government. There would be no difficulty in the secular teaching, and the Government kept the secular teaching, and it clearly was the business of to teach domestic theology. This policy was adopted in the Act for the Abolition of State aid to Religion, and the House had resolved to follow it in dealing with the Church and School lands. His principal objection to the proposal to extend the Bill clause, which provided for religious teaching, was that it was both miserable and impracticable. He also stated that Denominational schools were not entitled to State aid after the repeal of the Public Schools Act. The im-marks of history could, no doubt, be taught without the introduction of controversial matters. He reminded this bill as a compromise, like the present one, and that it was a compromise, and that it was He hoped to see all the provisions which it contained for domestic theology excluded from it. He trusted before long to see an entire divorce between Church and State in educational, as there was already in religious matters, and he supported this bill because it was great step in the right direction, and because he believed it would be a step towards the abolition of the school Mr. Huxxoxoxox intended to vote for the bill, and could not see the force of the objections to the bill.
 The State could not interfere in religious matters, but there was no reason why it should decide that religion should not be taught in the Public Schools if arrangements for that purpose could be made.
 Mr. ROXBURY demanded the Public Schools from the assaults of the Roman Catholic Bishops, and quoted the statement of the Archbishop of Canterbury that the Catholic Church had approved the National system, which was identically the same as the Public School system.
 Denominational education must, he thought, sooner or later come to an end, and he believed that no one in the colony had done more than Archbishop Vaughan to hasten the termination of their existence. There was, he argued, no place for such a greater amount of religious teaching than what was given in the of the Catholic Church in Italy and in other quarters of the world where their authority predominated, and he for one would not consent to the continuance of De-denominational education, which payment by results would be in another form. He was in favour of compulsory education, and referred to the opinion of that body, which was in favour of the bill, and he adopted in this colony. He heartily supported the bill.
 Mr. O'CONNOR upheld the right of Archbishop Vaughan to take the stand which he had done on the Education question in consideration of the fact that he was the head of an important section of the Christian Church, and that it was his duty to warn his people against sending their children to schools which he believed to be tainted with the errors of the their morals. The declaration in the Parliamentary corresponded with the opinion of Cardinal Manning, who was one of the most eminent scholars in England, and who had stated that religion could not be saved from education. Dr. Moorhouse, the Protestant Bishop of Melbourne, had recently enunciated sentiments to the same effect, and he trusted that the Government would not allow the errors of the clergy to be of the Church of England, and in other quarters of the world where their authority predominated, and he

 corresponded with the opinion of Cardinal Manning,
 who was one of the most eminent scholars in England,
 and who had stated that religion could not be saved
 for one would not consent to the continuance of De-
 pulsory education, and referred to the opinion of that
 in this colony. He heartily supported the bill.

CHRISTMAS and NEW YEAR CARDS.—Just opened a large and elegant assortment. EDWARD R. COLE, corner of George and King streets.

Extract from the STONEY MORNING HERALD, October 29th, 1879.
"Some exceedingly pretty cards have been forwarded to this office by Mr. Cole, stationer, of George and King streets, as specimens of recent importations to the Christmas and New Year seasons. They represent bouquets of beautiful flowers, others have depicted on them happy family groups, Extract from the SYDNEY DAILY TELEGRAPH, October 27th, 1879.

"We have received from Mr. F. L. Cole, of George and King streets, some very really elegant Christmas and New Year cards. They are of a beautiful design, and are just to hand, and include English, German, French, and American cards. In design they are moved as they are handsome, and are sure to attract more than an ordinary share of attention. Some of them represent familiar scenes, others, the customs, dress, &c. of all sorts of countries and coloured in tints to suit the subject. The plain cards are also admirably executed."

Extract from FREEMAN'S JOURNAL, November 1st, 1879.

CHRISTMAS AND OTHER CARDS.—We have received from Mr. E. R. Cole, stationer, King and George streets, Sydney, a number of very handsome cards which he has recently imported from England, France, and Germany. They are admirably executed, and the designs are of the most beautiful. They are all artistically and beautifully printed. The cards represent a variety of beautiful objects, many new notions, and others are mechanical "vulgar" cards. Altogether the collection sent us is the best I have seen. We will, however, and we can safely predict a large sale for them." EDWARD R. COLE,
